Pediatric Cancer Awareness Month

September is National Childhood Cancer Awareness Month. The Office of Data Sharing strives to support the community of researchers working tirelessly to combat childhood, adolescent, and young adult cancer. To further support these efforts, we provide resources like CCDI Hub, which help streamline access to valuable data and tools, fostering collaboration and enabling researchers to share and reuse data more effectively. We are proud to be a part of the culture of collaboration that is exemplified by the scientists who work across institutions, and across borders, to learn as much as possible from every child so that therapies continue to advance. We especially express our gratitude to the countless children and families who have volunteered for cancer research studies in any way, and we pledge to help the research community to be excellent stewards of your data.

NCI's Index of NCI Studies

The NCI's "Index of NCI Studies" (INS) is a web application currently being built to organize many of the projects that NCI has supported in recent years. INS aims to showcase the connection between programs, projects, grants, and research outputs (e.g., publications, data, clinical trials, patents, etc.). Whenever possible, INS will provide links to the output of these projects. Additionally, INS is working on creating a dedicated view to help users search across datasets, making it easier to connect shared resources to their own research, knowledge or understanding. This effort is ongoing and evolving, and the Office of Data Sharing would love to hear your feedback or suggestions. Please contact us at NCIOfficeOfDataSharing@mail.nih.gov
